The world values a champion. Failure should be avoided at all costs. My basic desire is to be admired. My basic fear is to be rejected. The need to be admired induces me to work hard to improve myself and succeed, which often cause others around me to admire me. When I feel admired, my need is satisfied and a balance is reached. When I am not working hard to improve myself, others admire me less, which increases my need to be admired. Thus this helps me to again work hard to improve myself.

I am most afraid of not being good enough. I've noticed that I'm more concerned about how others perceive me than many people around me. And I sometimes worry more than I should about doing things perfectly or feel afraid that others will mock me in some way. I desire for people to respect my achievements. My problem is that I can't win everyone's esteem no matter what I achieve. I desire affirmation, for everyone to agree with me. My fear of being rejected can cause me to be competitive and hostile towards others as a defence, which makes me even less admirable and further in-creases my fear. The cycle continues to build up.

I want a romance that's about more than love for love's sake, a romance where love grows out of deeper need to learn and understand other aspects of my life through the teachings of someone else. Love isn't the only thing I'm after. I want power, success, attention, even fame. I want to be recognised, doted on, and adored for my talents. And the object of my desire is the person best suited to provide me with these things - a boss, a mentor, a teacher, or a troubled genius, someone that will give my self-image a boost. Similarly, the object of my affection can take the place of an absent parent or role model, providing security and nurturance.

I'm surrounded by a ruby-red aura that reveals my passionate, sensual nature - I'm all about earthly pleasure. Whether I'm getting a great massage or having a sumptuous dinner, I delight in all. That's why it's the material things that really float my boat. If I can taste it, touch it, smell it, or see it right here, right now, I'm all over it. After all, I'm firmly rooted in reality, preferring to live in the present rather than the future. And I have a quick temper, too - most folks with red auras do. But I cool down quickly, turning my outspoken energy and stamina to projects with fast, concrete results. A hot-blooded go-getter like me is always in favour of instant gratification.
