When it comes to my behaviour I act like an adolescent, which means that I'm very focused on my immediate environment. The positive qualities of being an adolescent are an easy-going attitude and a willingness to try many things that older people shy away from. My sense of adventure and risk-taking is strong and reveals my exciting and fun sides. This means, however, that I find a thrill in rebelling, doing things that I shouldn't. Due to my egocentric nature, it might sometimes be difficult for me to see how my actions can affect others.

I express my emotions instinctively. In many ways that's great, because it means that I am in touch with my feelings. I'm considered open and honest by those around me. But it also means that I practice little control over my public expression, and I can be insensitive to the needs of others.

I am an emotional risk-taker! They haven't invented a life-changing, emotional challenge that scares me. Some people might be afraid to confess a crush or be the first to say "I love you", but I go for it every time. That makes for an exciting, often fulfilling journey through life, as long as I don't put too much of myself on the line at once.

My romantic fantasy is to have a foreign affair! I'm not afraid to experiment and do something different. That's why my romantic fantasy is exotic and exciting and usually takes place on distant soil. I might be on business in the Orient or taking a solo vacation through Europe. There's always time for some international intrigue. From the dark stranger in the pub to the striking fellow next to me on the train - I never know which mysterious character might approach me. But since life doesn't always imitate a Cindy Sheldon novel, I'll settle for a romantic dinner at a hidden basement bistro, a private screening of Casa Blanca or a weekend retreat in the mountains.

My true colour is Red, the colour of racy sport cars, blushing cheeks, and luscious roses. Red symbolises passion, romance, and love. So, since I'm ruled by red, I trust my feelings more than my brain and tend to act spontaneously. If I see something I want, I go for it without thinking twice - impulsive is my middle name. I don't wait around for people to make decisions either: I drive right in, and quite the romantic, I pay close attention to my emotions. In fact, if my heart isn't in what I'm doing, I won't be satisfied. Of course, even when I do pour all my energy into the projects I tackle, my impetuous nature means my passions can shift as frequently as the wind. That's why I have trouble with commitment. No one lives life more completely than I do.
