I've caught that Internet bug! The dot-com world is like no other - fun, fast-paced, with lots of risk. Although, I'm undaunted by the crazy hours, hectic schedules, and un-certain future that inevitably come with a dot-com. Moreover, job security and stability don't phase me too much. Despite any hesitations, I find that there's something cool and exciting about working under high stakes employment - it brings out the competitor in me. In a dot-com, the risk is high, but the potential payoff is great. So I succeed in this environment by being a real team player, I'm also someone who understands that working in a dot-com means giving up a lot of my personal time and space. But the creative aspects of my job, the enthusiastic environment, and the professional autonomy I gain, compensate for any sacrifice.

I'm definitely on my way to becoming a nutrition guru. I've got a good grasp of the basics and I understand the importance of eating well, it will just take that extra little bit of effort to ensure that my diet is as nutritious as it can be. Luckily for me, there's tons of information out there, both in print and on the Internet. A useful maxim for healthy eating is "Nothing in Excess". I've started learning more about nutrition and am applying it to my eating habits, I'm on my way to a happier and healthier lifestyle.

I am totally fit to commit! Not only does the idea of sharing my life and my things with someone I care about make me excited, but also it's something I've eagerly anticipated. Claustrophobic or panicky about spending a lot of time with my significant other? Not me! I find comfort in the closeness and intimacy that real sharing brings. Plans, hopes and dreams are my favourite topics of conversation. Whether it's a chat about a big vacation six months from now or a playful talk about what I'm going to name my future children, I thrive on discussing the future with my significant other. I love the idea of making long-term plans as a couple and the accompanying feelings of security and intimacy, comfort and excite me. I love talking about "us" and showering my partner with affectionate words. I'm not afraid of expressing myself verbally. In fact, I take great comfort in being able to share my emotions with my significant other.

I have a healthy sex drive! No one likes a prude. In general, I give as well as I get, though, everyone can get a little selfish under the cover. And while I'm at it, I go ahead and admit it: I've flashed a big smile to get my way in the bedroom before. But for the most part, I strike as a pretty generous lover who's doing well at keeping my raw, sexual power in check.
