

NAME: Alessandra Di Pisa
DATE OF BIRTH: 7 January 1977
NATIONALITY: Swedish
LIKELY CAREERS: Journalist

I have the ability to make strangers feel like old friends and I have such tremendous interpersonal skills that I put my interviewers at ease during my own job interviews. I have a natural propensity for role-playing and acting and I like to tell funny stories, especially about my friends. This penchant may be why I am attracted to journalism. If you want the sixth fleet to know something, you'll just tell me.

Friends are what life is about to me. I hold up my end of the relationship, sometimes being victimised by less caring individuals. Being around people energises me. I have real difficulty being alone, especially on a regular basis. Sometimes when I publicise my feelings too often, I may put off some of the crowd of friends I naturally attract. I am strongly influenced by the opinions of my friends.

I'm like an angel with a heart of gold. Whenever there's a chance to pitch in, save the day or just make life easier for the people around me, I'm the one that does all that's in my power. But as natural as it is for me to take care of people around me, I don't forget to treat myself right too. The best friendships and loves of a lifetime tend to blossom when I become my own guardian angel.

Maybe it's too early to tell if I really have found "Mr. Wonderful", but I've met someone great and there's definite potential here that he just might be "the One"! Although there's no strict definition of love, there are some things that help me discover if this relationship is meant to last: My best qualities seem to shine when he's around. I feel all warm and fuzzy just thinking about him, even when he's not there. When I think about my future, he's in the picture. These are just a few of the good signs. There's no easy recipe for a long-lasting relationship, but I've found some of the main in-gredients. Chemistry is definitely a great foundation. Then I add some trust, communication, and respect. Of course, a dollop of humour and a generous amount of romance make it much more satisfying. There are many more things I can add to make it better, but that depends on the needs of the relationship and the individuals. The two of us have clearly mastered some key elements and seem well on our way to building a loving, long-lasting relationship. If, however, I'll have some doubts about him, or if this relationship isn't truly what I want, all I have to do is to listen to my inner voice. "Forever" shouldn't be taken lightly. I try to explore my fears and concerns thoroughly. And, after all, if he's not "the One", that's okay, because I'll find someone who is even better for me. It's a win-win situation!
